The screenshot shows the BMJ website interface. At the top is a navigation bar with the 'thebmj' logo and several menu items: Research, Education, News & Views, Campaigns, Archive, For authors, Jobs, Hosted, and a Search icon. Below the navigation bar is a 'Latest articles' section. The first article is highlighted with a pink box labeled '1'. It features a colorful graphic of a hand holding a tablet displaying a medical report with a pulse rate of 65. The article title is 'Putting patients in control of data from electronic health records' and it is categorized as 'Analysis'. To the right of the main article are three smaller article previews: 'Sixty seconds on ... Dry January' (News), 'Blood pressure guidelines as starting point in clinical decisions' (Editorial), and 'The BMJ charity appeal: help Médecins Sans Frontières' volunteer doctors help the Rohingya people' (Feature). Each preview includes a small image and a 'BMJ opinion' snippet. The page is annotated with pink boxes containing numbers 1 through 5, corresponding to the list on the left.
